HEALTH: New tests will help predict potential illness

A look into the future

COMPUTER software is being used to predict the probability of people suffering illness in later life.

The forecasts for illnesses such as diabetes will be offered to everyone over 40.

They will include cholesterol, blood pressure and blood glucose checks, the results of which will be combined with information about each patient's lifestyle to calculate their risk rating.

Laurence Tressler, deputy head of medicines management for city health trust NHS Coventry, said: "Patients can then see how that picture could change if they made certain changes to their lifestyle, like quitting smoking, losing weight or exercising more."

Gam Amar, chair of Coventry Local Pharmaceutical Committee, has already carried out 40 healthy life checks at the Allesley Pharmacy in Birmingham Road.

More than one third of those patients were found to be major risk of developing heart disease and were referred to their doctor for help.

He said: "I would encourage as many people as possible aged over 40 to have these checks with a pharmacy – for many it will be reassuring but for others it could even be a life-saver."

One of those people tested is Allesley grandmother Yvonne Shipton.

The 59 year-old said: "My results were brilliant, which just shows that the action I took a year ago in giving up smoking and taking up regular walking have really improved my health."

So far 33 pharmacists in Coventry have been trained to offer the NHS health life check.
